Weapons Training" is a piece of war poetry written by Bruce Dawe in 1970. A dramatic monologue spoken by a battle-hardened drill sergeant training recruits about to be sent off to the Vietnam War , its anti-war sentiment is evident but more oblique than in Dawe's other well-known war poem, "Homecoming" , written two years earlier.

It is sometimes assumed that the writer will be always in the best position to know what was meant in making this or that choice of language, and that the critic (in the classroom, in the critical article) must or should defer to the writer. Not so. A writer's choice of language must of necessity be intuitive. There is a choosing process going on,
